can say or write after his name " late of the - Guards," occupies a position quite as enviable as the person who has been a member of Parliament, and is unscated after three mouths, for bribery, but who all the rest of his life can pridefully say "When I was in the House." Small puffs of this kind go for much in our social economy. On whatever grounds, the getting of sons as officers into the army becomes a sort of superstition, calculated to enlarge the sphere of Jingoism. It is hard to say so, but, to all appearance, the army is in some degree an institute for the cultivation of idleness and contempt for honest industry. We are fortified in the remark from what has lately been said by Sir Garnet Wolseley, on the subject of military service. "Hitherto our army has been a pleasant home for idle men -generation after generation of officers have been attracted to it by the case and pleasure it secured to the Euglish gentleman -enjoyment that was only heightened by the opposite extremes of privation and hard work which an occasional campaign af-
